

PRESS RELEASE: CrisisHelper Introduces New Anti-Recession Software

On 9 April, developers from Ukraine released CrisisHelper, simple accounting software which was developed to help people all over the world to overcome the current World Economic Crisis. Free licenses were sent to world leaders to help them fight the Crisis.

The program is a very simplified accounting application; it was created for people who don't have special accounting knowledge or time to learn difficult features. There are several very important features in CrisisHelper: planning and control of income/expenses, creation of shopping lists, regular reports. The main aim of the software is to cut expenses. The interface of the program is simple and intuitive because it doesn't have any advanced features like bank account management or billing and invoicing.

The Raison D'être of this program is to show the user his/her expenses and help to cut them in tough times of the World Economic Crisis. CrisisHelper was built on the main principles of extreme accounting: ease of use, fast learning speed and cutting expenses.

There are many different accounting packages on the market today, but all of them have a lot of different additional features and are rather complicated. CrisisHelper has one main feature - cutting expenses, and that is why it is very simple and small.

At the moment there is only the English version of the program, but the developers of CrisisHelper are planning to localize it on many different languages.

Free licenses of this program were sent to world leaders. The authors of CrisisHelper hope that it will help not only ordinary people but presidents and members of governments to fight the Recession.

A free fully functional 30-day license is available for download at <http://www.CrisisHelper.com>

Earlier, these developers released a free program for voice search in the internet – VoiceSearchBar. However, in the face of the World Economic Crisis, they decided to change the direction of their developments.
